

Angela tries to explain to her friend why she feels the way she does about her mother.

Marie: I'm sorry Angie, but I think your hatred for your mother is clouding your judgment.

Angela: Maybe, but you don't know her like I do.

Marie: Okay. You ran away from home when you were a teenager. Did you ever think to talk to her about what happened between you and your step-dad?

Angela: Of course not. And in any case, it wouldn't have done any good.

Marie: How do you know that?

Angela: Because she knew exactly what was going on and she chose to look the other way. She knew and she did nothing.

Marie: How do you know she knew? Did you ever give her the chance to step up? No, you just ran away.

Angela: Don't you get it? I couldn't talk to her because if I did, then she... then she would have been able to deny it, to tell me what a good father he was being to me, to say she didn't believe me. Can't you see that that would have been worse than anything he ever did to me?
